Multicultural Health Week is on again for 2011 to be celebrated from Monday 5th to 12th September.

This year's theme is "Health Information in Your Language".

It highlights a new partnership with the State Library of NSW whereby libraries are committed to store health information in community languages and with the aid of bilingual librarians, assist members of CALD communities to obtain information on a range of health subjects.

Multicultural Health Week (MHW) is a week which celebrates diversity and the health of culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) communities.

It reminds NSW health services, government agencies, local councils, CALD groups and media the importance of providing equitable access to information and resources to Australians whose first language may not be English.

For more information about Multicultural Health Week and upcoming activities or to register your MHW 2011 events visit www.multiculturalhealthweek.com or call 02 9816 0347.
